

AUSTRALIA THE FAIR

AUSTRALIA THE CONDEMNED

By Craig White

Australia is a 'fair' country with bountiful natural beauty, a vibrant economy and strong constitution. Yet it is also on the verge of the greatest calamity ever to befall a people – why?

This is perhaps the most serious and sober message I ever written. It is our duty to warn Australia of the Divine wrath to come, the reasons for it and the Good News of the World Tomorrow.

The lives in Sydney, Australia.

Australia has entered the most serious crisis of its 213 years of White settlement. This great nation is on the brink of the worst trials imaginable. Utter destruction is on the way, terrors worse than anything thought possible. Believe it or not, Australia is being set up for the most horrible stresses which may come upon any nation - cruel Asiatic invasion and slave labour camps. It will come soon! Very likely much sooner than any of us may realise.

Historical Background to Australia

Prior to examining what the Bible and in particular the book of Ezekiel predicts for Australia, we need to overview the background to this great nation. The Australian continent was first occupied after the flood of Noah by the intriguing Aboriginal peoples. These amazing people are descended from Ham (a future article may detail their origin) unlike the current majority of Australians who descend, in the main, from the House of Israel as is proven in the following works:

- United States and Britain in Prophecy by Herbert W Armstrong
- Europe and America in Prophecy by Garner Ted Armstrong
- The United States and Britain in Bible Prophecy by the United Church of God
- America and Britain in Prophecy Raymond F McNair
- What's Ahead for America and Britain? by John Ogwyn
- The Migrations of Israel by Raymond Cole
- The Lost Tribes of Israel – Found! by Steven Collins
- Lost Israelite Identity; & The Tribes; & Ephraim by Yair Davidy
- plus a host of other books and manuscripts by Dr Terry Blodgett, Dr James Tabor, John Hulley, Raymond Capt and other prominent researchers.

Australia's genesis is rather unique. This great nation began as a penal colony when the first fleet arrived under Captain Arthur Phillip on 18 January 1788. The colony itself was established at Sydney Cove on 26 January which is commemorated as Australia Day - a national holiday. Soon a way was found to explore the inland areas. New settlements were established along the coast, in Tasmania, Western Australia (1829), South Australia (1836), Victoria (1851) and Queensland (1859).

With the discovery of gold in 1851, an enormous influx of migrants occurred with the ensuing increase in investment, capital and business opportunities and the prosperity of the various states on the continent began to boom. For instance, Australia possesses some of the wealthiest deposits of mineral resources in the world.

This continent has come a long way over the past 200 years – a relatively bare continent with few mountains, rivers and lakes, it is approximately 85% desert and semi-desert and can only hold some 20-25 millions whilst maintaining a high standard of living. Yet is a 'fair' country, with much beauty and variety, hence the national anthem “Advance Australia Fair”, originally composed as an ode to the British Empire (the anthem may be found at the end of this article).

On 1 January 1901, the six British colonies federated to become the Commonwealth of Australia. The initial governments of the young nation were very populist and patriotic, basing many of their decisions on Biblical principles: protectionist tariffs with a slant toward the mother country, Great Britain; court arbitration in industrial disputes and the setting of minimum wages; old age pensions; a strong defence; and strong family values. In contrast, our leaders today are bent on integration with Asia; are biased against Britain; are fast moving away from the hard fought for advances won by the Australian workers; and have very little time for or interest in moral or family values. (see the book South-land of the Holy Spirit. A Christian History of Australia by E R Kotlowski, Christian History Research Institute). To find out more about the symbols and emblems of Australia, a list of website with this fascinating information may be found at the end of the article.

Our political, religious, media and academic leaders are leading us astray and far away from God (Is 3:12; 9:16; 10:1). So what of the future? How will God deal with such a wicked, sinning nation? Let us peek into the Word of God and understand what the prophecies predict will soon occur to Australia.

Australia's Punishment Prophesied!

God Almighty has bestowed wonderful blessings upon the occupants of this great continent. Such spaciousness, mineral wealth, unique fauna and flora, agricultural abundance, wonderful cities and riches which are the envy of the peoples of the region.

Yet you Australians are warned by the God of the Bible that you have behaved like spoilt brats! You, and the other Anglo-Saxon-Keltic-Nordic nations have behaved dishonourably toward your God. This wonderful Being has showered upon you blessings unknown to the gentiles. But what have you done with it?

Have you been a wonderful light to the nations or an example of rebelliousness and ingratitude?

Have you shown the Asian and Pacific nations the ways of God, your Creator, or engaged in vileness after vileness? Are your cities not riddled with violence; is not pornography a plague upon your minds; are not you intermarrying with foreign races which God forbade; is not liberal divorce and remarriage, adultery, fornication and the promotion of homosexuality rampant; and do you not oppress the needy and poor? Why do you permit euthanasia, surrogacy, radical feminism? And why have you neglected to obey the Ten Commandments and the Sabbath sign?

If you realise your sins against God, then now is the time to repent! We want every one of you to know what will happen to you, your family, your neighbourhood and your nation. Nothing could be more important or urgent in your life.

Ezekiel's Warning Message to Australia

Bible prophecy warns that the modern nations of Israel are headed for captivity. The Old Testament prophet, Ezekiel, thundered some piercing warnings to Israel as we shall shortly see (this is sometimes known as Ezekiel's Message or the Captivity Doctrine).

Nations to our north will invade this continent and bring our peoples to their knees. One third of White Australians will die from disease and famine due to the effects of war; one third will die directly because of war; and the remaining one third will go into captivity: "and a third part ... shall scatter in the wind; and I will draw out a sword after them" (Ezek 5:2). Massacre and butchery unimaginable will be wreaked upon this nation.

Which are the gentile nations which will be involved with the coming terrible invasion of Australia (and probably New Zealand)? Prophecy indicates the strong probability that the various invading nations will partition the spoils of Israel among themselves. One in Joel 3:2b speaks of the scattering of Israel and the parting or dividing of Israel amongst her enemies (Amos 7:17b; Micah 2:4; Dan 11:39 seem to tell a similar tale). So every indication is that several nations will be involved in this bloody and bitter exercise.

Isaiah predicts that the captives of Israel will be scattered among many nations, including Cush (Is 11:11) - the peoples residing in southern India; and also the eastern branch of Tarshish (Is 60:9; 66:19) - Japan, the land of the rising sun. No doubt Indonesia will also be involved.

Australia itself may be divided up by secret agreement between India, Japan and Indonesia. For instance, Japan may take the Eastern States; Indonesia Northern Territory and South Australia; and India Western Australia. (Similarly, Russia may have Alaska returned to her by Europe if she keeps out of the coming world crisis; the Caribbean's may be given the South-east USA; Mexico the South-West; Japan may take Hawaii and Europe will divide up the rest of the North American continent.)

The prophet Isaiah also proclaims scattered Israelites from "beyond the rivers of Cush" (Zeph 3:10) will be liberated after a period of captivity. Here the Aramaic renders Cush as 'Hodu' which means India in the Hebrew.

Taken Captive by the Land of the Rising Sun!

According to the Shinto traditions, the Japanese were a race apart, the Yamato people - not just a chosen people, but the actual seed of the gods and as such formed the "root of the world". This powerful belief in their uniqueness was combined with garnering knowledge and developing it. As such, these aforementioned characteristics, traditionalism, conservatism combined with progressiveness and cosmopolitanism, together with living on a large island, produced some likeness to the British. Indeed, in 1913, Baron Makino, minister of agriculture and commerce observed: "Our ambition is to be to the East what Great Britain is to the West."

Within their core social attitudes and social beliefs, lay the groundwork and disposition toward trade, commerce and industry. This together with strong Shinto traditionalism, produced an Asiatic equivalent to the conservative British and their commercial imperial hegemony. But the Japanese economic culture in particular emphasised that one should be tied to economic households with innate service to customers and employees, maintaining a durable and lasting system to produce wealth and job satisfaction. This economic house has to be maintained and expanded for the benefit of all any condition. This core value was one of the founding reasons for the Japanese economic power. It no doubt has had and will have its ups and downs, but it seems to be durable enough to survive and revive after a decade in the doldrums and huge public debt.

Japan was a hermitic medieval kingdom until 1853 after which it learned from the mistakes of its neighbours and technology of the West to establish itself as the dominant Asian power by 1895 when it defeated the forces of the Chinese Empire and in 1905 it was able to even destroy Russian forces in Manchuria. It had now become a junior rank power, but wanted more as part of a 100 year war strategy dating back to 1842 when the British humiliated the Chinese in the Opium War.

They believed that they had divine right to rule for they were a superior race, the Whites of Asia, defined in their blood. Biologists began to produce studies on the supposed apeish features of other nations and noting their more refined features, milder body odour and so forth. The Emperor was worshipped as the descendant of the sun goddess and became the divine icon of the race. He was greeted with two upheld and extended arms (the Nazis held one arm up) with shouts of Banzai (= "May you live 10,000 years") (the Nazis cried "Sieg und Heil" = "Victory and Salvation" or "Heil Hitler" = "Salvation is from Hitler). The Japanese Imperial Flag was white with a red sun in the centre with rays extending outward to each corner, symbolising that they dwell at the rising of the sun, and will reach out to each corner of the globe (the Nazi flag was an inversion of this with a white circle in the centre and red on the outer. The pagan swastika sat in the centre of the white circle, symbolising the sun wheel).

From this evolved their entry into World War Two. Shortly after the Pearl Harbour bombings, they should have returned to finish the job, but left enough for America to rebuild. Their propaganda at the time pronounced that the empire's 100 million people and national cohesiveness would achieve glory - "100 million hearts beating as one" or "100 million people as one bullet" and "100 million advancing like a ball of fire". Amongst their greatest strategic mistakes was not to invade Russia, which allowed the Russians to withdraw troops from the East and utilise them against the German aggressors. In addition, instead of invading Australia, they sought to invade Burma and even entered India before being driven back.¹

¹ After finalising this section I came across an interesting article by Joseph Huang on "Japan's Destiny - Yet to be Fulfilled". Following is an extract from it:

"The blueprint in the Tanaka Memorial is not limited to China and East Asia. Its gigantic ambition is not restricted to East Asia, but to include India, South-east Asia and Central Asia -- even far-distant Europe is not excluded from its plot. It says,

"Having all China's resources at our disposition, we will proceed to conquer India, the Archipelago, the Islands of the South Seas, Asia Minor, Central Asia and even Europe itself" (Japan's Kampf, p.148).

The Tanaka Memorial recognizes that to venture further, Japan will inevitably clash with the paramount power, the United States.

"But in carrying out this policy we have to face the U.S., which has been turned against us by China's policy of fighting poison with poison. In the future, if we want to control China, we must first crush the U.S., just as in the past we had to fight in the Russo-Japanese War" (ibid.). "

The unabridged copy of the Tanaka Memorial has never been found, and therefore the full extent of their aim and strategies remain hidden. A search among Japanese archives at the end of the Pacific War by Japanese and Americans also failed to turn up evidence of the document. It was reported that all 'sensitive' palace papers, government files and other documents had either been burnt during the war or were destroyed by Japanese authorities between the surrender and the arrival of the Occupation Forces. When the time came for prosecutors of Japanese war criminals to give evidence, they found almost no document to work on.

The global conquest would inevitably include Australia, lying as an extension of South-east Asia. In a book written by Henry P. Frei, he demonstrates that the Japanese Navy was in favour of an invasion of Australia while the Army hesitated immediately after the fall of South-east Asian countries:

"Whether or not to capture Australia became a serious topic for discussion whenever its main proponent, the [Japanese] Navy General Staff convened with Combined Fleet and the Army to decide the options of war aims for the next stage in 1942" (Japan's Southward Advance and Australia, 1991, p.161).

It was understandable that the Japanese Navy's main worry was Australia. They did not want it to become a crucial gateway for the United States and its allies to position their planes, ships, and soldiers for a retaliation. The Navy Captain Miwa Yoshitake wrote on January 6, 1942, "We must think quickly about invading Australia . . . the United States is now in the middle of reinforcing Australia, Fiji, and Samoa" (ibid., p.162). The Japanese recognized that Australia had to be separated from the United States, a troublesome source of military reserves --

"The chief of the Navy General Staffs Planning Section and chief champion of the Australia invasion idea, Captain Tomioka Sadatoshi, deeply feared such a disadvantageous development. He fervently believed that Australia must not become a strategic springboard for United States planes, ships, and soldiers gathering for a counter-offensive ... The war had perfectly shown how little air power meant without the development of air bases. If, however, the United States built up air power on the Australian continent, while at the same time applying pressure from the north, Japan could not possibly win. Australia, therefore, had either to be knocked out quickly, or cut off from America" (ibid.).

While the Navy was pressing for expansion, the Army hesitated. Major-General Tanaka Shin'ichi warned, "Naval plans to invade Australia do not quickly end the Pacific War, but make it the center of the next stage and overextend the limits of our offensive power in the Pacific" (ibid., p.163). They finally agreed that Australia should be isolated rather than invaded. It was the limitations of the army that saved Australia. Despite that, Port Darwin experienced a surprise attack and was destroyed on February 19, 1942. On the political front, pressure was applied on Australia to succumb or to be in line with the Japanese Imperialism --

"[Japan's] Prime Minister Tojo Hedeki continued to support pressuring Australia into submission by cutting her communication lines to the United States. In a Diet oration on 21 January he proclaimed decisive defeat for Australia if she continued to fly the flag of the enemy ... And in a further appeal to the leaders of Australia at an extraordinary session of the Diet on 28 May, Tojo repeated his threatening lure that it was not too late to make the right decision and toe the line with the Japanese Empire" (ibid., p.172).

The Japanese quest for global conquest is clear. The aim of the Imperial realm is to embrace the whole world under the universe. Japan believes the country and its people have a heaven-ordained and a sacred mission, and that sacred destiny has yet to be fulfilled."

Japan – the Tarshish of the East

We are told in Isaiah that the ships of Tarshish would be the first to bring the Israelites to the Holy Land during the future second Exodus (Isaiah 60:9). Why first? Because she would have repented of her evil toward the House of Israel when she would have taken Israel into captivity. We are being warned regularly by secular prophets in the media.² One such 'prophet' who has attempted to warn the Anglo-Saxon powers is Daniel Burstein, author of the book Yen! The Threat of Japan's Financial Empire which I thoroughly recommend to the reader. Will history repeat itself once again? Will Japan return "back to the future"? Will the Japanese take over the leadership of certain Asian nations in the event of America withdrawing from the region and leaving behind a political and military vacuum? And will Japan then form a new Axis with a German-led United Europe? Only time can tell. We now know with certainty that in World War Two their plans were to extend their empire through India to Iran; to Madagascar³ off the shores of Africa; the whole of Australia (with the exception of Tasmania which they were to leave for German settlement); and the western sea-board of Canada, the United States and Mexico.⁴ The proofs of the Japanese descent from the eastern branch of Tarshish is discussed in my forthcoming book Lost Races of the Ancient World – discovered at last! In the meantime, a paper discussing this with the title The Central Europeans and Japanese is available for free download from http://www.coglinks.org/resource/cw_papers/index.html.

In February 1941, Japan's expansionist policy was publicly elaborated upon by her Foreign Minister, Matsuoka, who stated that "the white race must cede Oceania to the Asiatics". The following year, 1942, a top Japanese military spokesman revealed that they would eventually claim the divine right to control the entire world:

"We will carry the war to London and Washington, and we will destroy all traces of European culture, and we will make our Nipponese spirit dominate the world".⁵

Most people today are unaware that the Japanese had their own Mein Kampf in World War Two. It was known as the Tanaka Memorial. This work revealed that a terrible plan had been developed for almost four hundred years. It emerged from a document dated 18th of May 1592. Japan's great hero, Hideyoshi, set forth in this document a plan for world domination and for establishing the Mikado Plan to rule the world!

On 25th July 1941, Baron Tanaka, Premier, presented the Tanaka Memorial as a blueprint for world empire under the Mikado which led to the attack on Pearl Harbour. In fact, it was their religious belief that the Mikado is directly descended from the Mother of Heaven. As he was thus the Son of Heaven, the Emperor had to be world emperor and worshipped as very God! (how similar to the Western false prophet described in II Thessalonians 2:1-5)

General Tomoyuri Yamashita, Japanese Supreme Commander in Malaya, in an interview prior to his execution as a war criminal in the Philippines in 1946, outlined what were his recommendations for a Japanese invasion of Australia. His desire was to push on to Australia after the fall of Singapore but Japanese Prime Minister Tojo opted instead for Burma and India to appease Hitler. He said that he planned to make dummy landings to draw away the "pitifully small number of Australian troops" followed by landings on either side of the major cities of Australia and cut them off. With only Sydney and Brisbane occupied, it would have been simple to subdue the rest of Australia. He felt that the actual conquest of all of Australia was not feasible as it was too large; in addition supply lines would have been extremely difficult to maintain.

He told the interviewers that the Japanese government machinery for ruling Australia was prepared and several diplomats who had previously represented Japan in Australia had been briefed and were standing by to follow the Japanese armies into the country to rule it with an iron fist.

Documents discovered in military archives in 1993 uncovered a Japanese plot to attack Sydney and Melbourne with bubonic plague, the black death. In its Harbin biological warfare centre in Manchuria, the infamous Imperial Army Unit 731 successfully bred plague bacteria (in addition to cholera, typhoid, anthrax etc) and deliberately infected 3,000 Chinese, Korean and Mongolian civilians with the diseases from which they died horrible deaths. Plague-infected fleas were dropped over Changde in Hunan Province and elsewhere, resulting in an epidemic which killed several hundred in a few days. As the war was drawing to an end, they planned to send plagues into Samoa, Guam and the Philippines as well as Dutch Harbour in Alaska. Journal records show that Unit 731 was ordered to ensure that the bacteria could be taken by ship or submarine to Sydney, Melbourne and Hawaii and released to kill hundreds of thousands.⁶

It would not take much for combined forces say from Japan, India and Indonesia to take Australia and to divide the country up between themselves. Indeed, it has been said that Japan has long looked upon Australia as a prime piece of real estate, with only historical factors preventing its conquest and colonisation of the continent centuries ago.

At the Battle of Sekigahara (20 October 1600AD), one of the most significant wars in Japanese history, Ieyasu Tokugawa destroyed the opposition and became the Shogun three years later. He united the country and it closed up to the outside world, taking on the characteristics of a hermit:

Of this behaviour, historian Malcolm Kennedy wrote:

"Had she not remained cut off from the outside world during the vitally important years when the colonial empires of the Western Powers were taking shape, Australia, New Zealand, Malaya, and other territories in the Pacific area might well have fallen into her hands rather than into those of others".⁷

Thanks to God and His intervention, Australia and New Zealand were spared (see the surrender document for the South-east Asia theatre which I picked up on a trip to Singapore). Perhaps there still lurks a secret desire for lebensraum in the largely empty land "Down Under".

Unparalleled Horrors Await Australia

This Work of the Church of God endeavours to fulfil the commission given to Ezekiel, to warn of coming invasion, captivity and slave labour camps (Ezek 3:17; 33:1-7). Like Ezekiel, this Work is one which watches world events as they fulfil prophecy, to warn the peoples of 20th century House of Israel that military invasion and devastation is imminent. Yet we also proclaim God's mercy to Israel - the Good News of the World Tomorrow and the Messiah's deliverance of our peoples. Soon there will be peace on earth (Is 2:1-4) and the peoples of Israel will learn to rule under the Messiah with justice, righteousness, and for the good of all nations, tongues and peoples.

But in the meantime, will we heed the urgent warnings of Ezekiel to Australia and escape the approaching Great Tribulation (Rev 3:10; 12:14). Or will we submit to the most terrible and painful fate ever to happen to any people?

Advance Australia Fair – toward repentance or destruction? The choice is yours!
